April 2022 Market Recap

The spring High Point Market proved to feel like a reunion after the limitations of 2020-2021. Designers, dealers, and manufacturers attended in large numbers eager to see feel and experience new products, new fabrics, and an overall highly energized Market experience. We were excited to reveal our new collection by Scott Carpenter. New designs from an ingenious Furniture designer that uses fabrics and architectural design in his approach to his new collection.

Trends in 2022

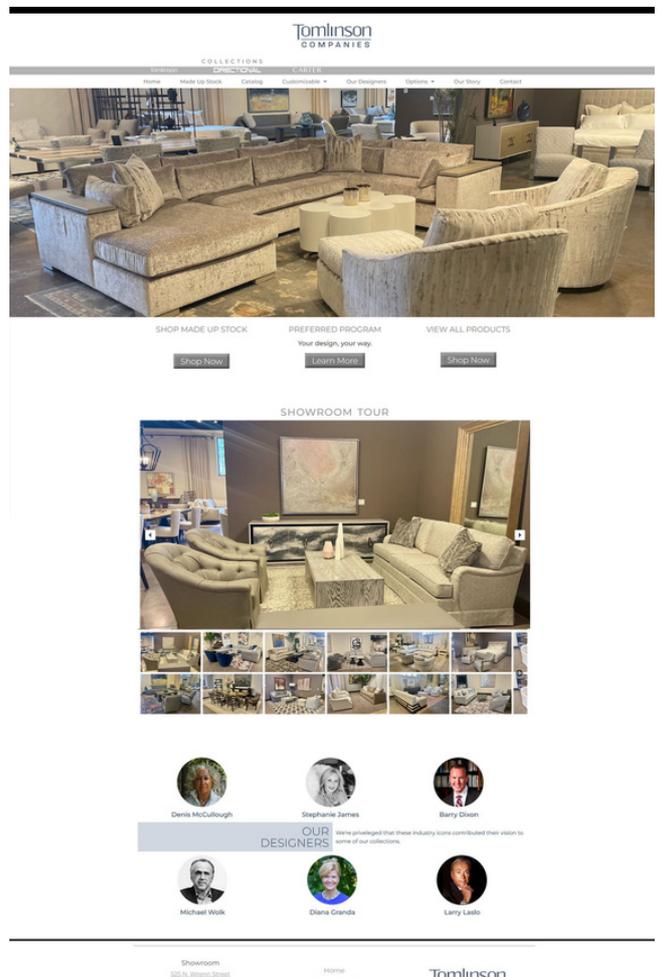

We asked some of our designers to share their thoughts about 2022 furniture and design trends. As comfort remains a priority in 2022, expect to continue seeing softlines and curves incorporated into upholstery and casegoods. Art Deco details like fluted and ribbed are being used on our sofas, chairs, and casegoods. In the last quarter of 2021 we leaned towards tweeds and crushed velvet with an influence of pale blues and greens which launched the inspirational design of 2022. Well-crafted, timeless pieces have taken precedence over mass-produced items. Vintage furniture will be revived and incorporated into design to reflect individual taste and style. With people less focused on item relevancy and more focused on item quality, we can expect to see a mixture of old and new furniture pieces, creating a sense of nostalgia within the home. With the mix of trending and antique styles, 2022 has proven to be the year of timeless design. This year, we have seen patterns inspired by nature. Looking back on when more time was spent indoors, an emphasis was placed on creating calming environments, this trend is continuing. This continues to be achieved by incorporating plants and creating a visual connection with nature. In addition to floral and foliage patterns, we saw an earthy color palette. Pale blues and greens are colors that were introduced with white backgrounds, bringing nature indoors. The light and airy scheme aimed to promote physical and mental health benefits by boosting productivity and reducing stress. In 2022 and years to come, designers are focusing on optimizing mental health and sustainability so customers can make mindful purchases without compromise.
